The Everton Ambassadors

Graham Stuart

His most successful period was while he was at Everton between 1993 and 1997. During this time he won the FA Cup in 1995, beating Manchester United 1–0 in the final at Wembley.

Graham's most famous moment in a blue shirt came on 7 May 1994. He scored two goals as Everton defeated Wimbledon on the final day of the season to escape relegation. He scored the winning goal nine minutes from time, completing a comeback after the Blues had fallen 2–0 down in the game.

These days, he does occasional television work for Sky Sports.

Ronny Goodlass

Highlights of his Everton career include scoring from the half-way line at West Ham, and playing a major role in 1977 in the run to the final of the League Cup against Aston Villa and the semi-final of the FA Cup against local rivals Liverpool.

He was the player who provided the cross for the infamous disallowed 'Bryan Hamilton' goal by controversial referee Clive Thomas, that would have seen Everton through to the 1977 FA Cup final.

He is best known these days as the Everton match day summariser for BBC Radio Merseyside.
